

Kaitlin Dumont

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR, BUSINESS LEADERSHIP PROGRAMS

Kaitlin Dumont started her career working in international education at EF Education First, working with approximately 100 schools in the state of Mississippi on one- to two-week educational programs abroad. After EF, Dumont transitioned to executive education at Harvard Business School. While the audience and content was different, the basic structure of a one- to two-week educational experience was familiar and it felt like a natural transition. When the opportunity arose to continue her career in executive education at Tuck, she quickly jumped on it. Tuck's "Personal, Connected, Transformative" culture aligns closely with Dumont's own philosophy, and she is proud to be a member of the Tuck community.

What is your favorite part of working with Executive Education?

I love seeing how our participants grow and develop in impactful ways over a short, but intense period. They build lifelong connections with their peer cohort, explore frameworks to drive change in their organizations while reflecting on where to go next, and interact with the faculty in meaningful ways, making a difference in their personal and professional lives over the course of the program.

What do you like to do outside of work?

I like to spend time with my husband and son outdoors whenever possible! The Upper Valley offers a great environment to be outside and take advantage of nature.
